Michel Marion a history of the Manoir de Kerhuel

The history of Kerhuel dates back to the 15th century.

Its owner is not just anyone. His name was Michel Marion. A Quimper man when it came to his profession as a merchant and collector, he liked to retire to Kerhuel to enjoy the countryside with his family. However, history is about to change the life of this prosperous bourgeois...

The year is 1487: alarming news is coming from the marches of Brittany. The final battle had been waged between the French and King Charles VIII on the one hand, and the Bretons led by Duke François II on the other.

The fate of the Duchy of Brittany was at stake.

Ancenis, Redon, Vannes and Ploërmel fell successively to the French. But faced with the king's offensive, patriotic Breton volunteers flocked from Rennes and Cornouaille to come to the duke's aid. Michel Marion armed a warship at his own expense and, with the help of the merchant captains of Penmarc'h, set sail for Nantes, where he broke the blockade.

Michel Marion lost his life during the seven weeks of bloody fighting that forced the French to give up. However, the sacrifice of these heroes was not enough to save the duchy: in August 1488, the signing of the Treaty of Le Verger obliged Duke François II to pay lige homage to the King of France.

Nevertheless, Michel Marion's actions earned him a place alongside Du Guesclin among the heroes of Breton and national history.
